What began as a way to increase public safety has turned into a civil rights concern.

Some residents of San Diego, California are demanding the removal of some 4,000 'Smart Streetlights' which they claim are an invasion of privacy.

The devices use sensor nodes to gather a range of information, such as weather and parking counts, but also uses facial recognition technology to count pedestrians.

Streetlights' which they claim are an invasion of privacy. The city installed the lights to cut cost and improve safety in the coastal city

The San Diego City Council approved the installation of the Smart StreetLights in December 2016 - and now approximately 4,200 are in place.

According to the council's website, the smart devices 'will help optimize traffic and parking, plus enhance public safety, environmental awareness and overall livability for San Diego residents'.

However, some residents are not sold on the benefits of the Smart StreetLights.

'For every 1,000th person in San Diego, there are almost two and a half cameras watching,' Geneviève Jones-Wright said in an interview with Fox 5.

'What is very concerning and troubling is that these cameras were installed and are being used all over this city without any oversight.'

The devices use sensor nodes to gather a range of information, such as weather and parking counts, but also uses facial recognition technology to count pedestrians. Some residents worry they are being watched and recorded as they walk down the streets

Although it is noted that the data collected is anonymous, Jones-Wright has voiced concerns about the technology.

'With these cameras having facial recognition capabilities and audio, we don't expect that our conversations are going to be recorded walking down a public street,' she said.

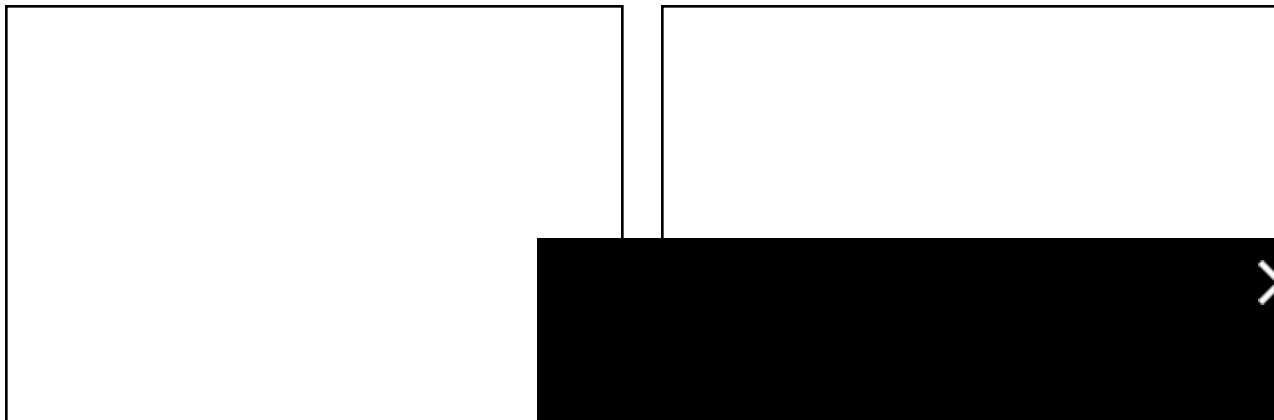

Even though there has been some backlash, other residents are hopeful about the opportunities the Smart StreetLights could bring to the city.

'It makes me feel safe knowing that we're being watched like that,' said San Diego resident Uche Chiemeka. 'If anything was to happen it would be recorded.'

Another resident also believes the lights were put in place for the grater good, as they help law enforcement.

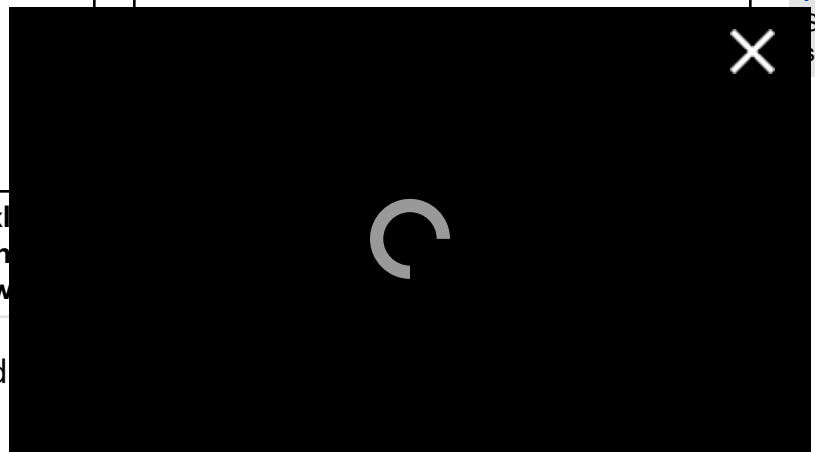

'I think I'm happy to have these cameras in case, you know, situations arise and you can catch it on camera and review it,' she said.

The city council had first deployed the technology with the idea of saving money and increasing safety.

Even though there has been some backlash, the Smart StreetLights could bring to the city the opportunity to solve crimes because they can record what happens on the streets

According to officials, the gathered data can be used to identify systems that benefit residents.

The nodes link to GE's CityIQ cloud database, allowing for the data to be available for research.

'From easier parking and decreased traffic congestion, enhanced public safety and environmental monitoring, enhanced bicycle route planning, to enhanced urban and real estate development planning, this platform can improve the quality of life in our city and boost economic growth,' reads the council's website.

'This open data platform possibilities range from pedestrian safety and directing drivers to open parking spaces to mobility planning and optimization, to helping first responders during an emergency and urban and real estate development planning.'

'Our hope is that new applications will be built using this technology to help improve city services and initiatives.'

WHAT CAN BE DONE TO PROTECT PRIVACY IN SMART CITIES?

Andrew Clement is a Professor Emeritus and surveillance researcher in the Faculty of Information at the University of Toronto, where he co-founded the Identity, Privacy and Security Institute.

He believes that plans to build the experimental Sidewalk Toronto neighborhood 'from the internet up' should raise red flags over privacy and democracy.

Speaking to the Toronto Star, he outlined a five-point plan to ensure that privacy and other rights are respected in the smart cities of the future:

► Bigger and better in every way: Apple's XS really does take the iPhone to the Max

Apple's new iPhone XS and XS Max go on sale on Friday - and the biggest handset Apple has ever made is also its best (and possibly unsurprisingly, its most expensive).

► The $250 beauty device that works like 'Photoshop for your face'

Israeli beauty-tech firm Pollogen has launched its Geneo Personal device, which stimulates oxygen from beneath the skin's surface to give you a clearer, fresher face within minutes.

► iOS 12 review: The update that really will improve your iPhone

Rather than cram in a plethora of new features, Apple's latest update is about boosting stability, with improvements in everything from FaceID and battery life.

► Naim Atom: The hifi that will change the way you listen to music

It's eye-wateringly expensive at $2,999, but Naim's Uniti Atom is a revelation, an integrated amplifier that makes it easy to stream music at a quality you've probably never heard before.

► The $1,000 wireless speaker that really IS worth the price: Naim Mu-so Qb review

Naim's incredible Mu-So Qb takes you back to the good old days - where the music captivates and enthralls, rather than simply being something in the background.

► The hi-tech $2,000 spin bike that really could change your life

Peloton's hi-tech bike lets you stream live and on demand rides to your home - and it's one of the best examples of fitness technology out there - at a price.

► The best all in one wireless speaker you'll ever hear: Naim Mu-so review

It might not be a name familiar to the US market, but Naim is a legendary British brand hoping to make a splash with the American launch of its $1499 Mu:So speaker.
