

China's Death Buses Deliver Executions, Organ Harvesting On the Go

Adam Frucci

2/11/09 11:10am

If you're a criminal in China, you'll want to avoid its new death buses, vehicles that carry out executions while streaming live video of them, then provide some privacy for organ harvesting.

The buses, of which over 40 are currently in use, are replacing firing squads as China's preferred method of execution. The buses provide a setup for lethal injections, and the acts are carried out on streaming video so local authorities can observe and ensure that everything is done legally.

to the west, as there's already a doctor on hand to administer the injection and they never show the bodies between execution and cremation.

Hoo boy. China! Always good for a lighthearted story in the morning. You're welcome. [USA Today via Jalopnik]

Chinese Death Bus: A Rolling Execution Studio?

Overpopulation and rampant crime has led the Chinese to develop a rolling lethal injection bus...

Read on jalopnik.com

HEALTH

First Death From Vaping-Linked Lung Illness Reported by Illinois Health Officials

Ed Cara

5 minutes ago

Photo: Scott Olson (Getty Images)

A patient has died after suffering a mysterious lung illness linked to vaping, health officials said Friday. The death comes in the wake of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention announcing this week that more than a hundred similar possible cases have been documented across the country.

The Illinois Department of Public Health (IDPH) reported that a person who had been hospitalized with severe respiratory illness after vaping died. They did not release any further details about the deceased, including their age or gender. But in the same update, they reported that 22 people in the state so far are confirmed to have come down with

See more

